Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow.

Sincere service sustains this universe. If humankind serves Nature selflessly, Nature will serve humankind. We expect to have the right amount of rain and sun at the right time, yet we are not interested in protecting our forests and mountains. We long for clean water. At the same time, we pollute our streams and rivers. Only when we coexist with love, trust, respect and an attitude of service, can we achieve success and happiness in life. Whenever we forget this principle, Nature will lash back at us in the form of natural disasters, war, conflict and other forms of disharmony.

Whether it is a family, a community or an organisation, we want all the members to function in harmony. In order for this harmony to arise, the members should construct a 'bridge of love' between each other by serving each other. The foundation of selfless service is selfless love. Love and service are not two; they are eternally united, like a flower and its fragrance. It's not easy to serve others selflessly, but we must put in effort to that end.

True service takes place when we understand the heart of the suffering and serve them. For this, we should be able to understand the minds of those in pain and to go down to their level and help.

We have all experienced pain and sadness. Therefore, when we see someone else in pain, we should have the heart to openly share their pain. Then, we will be able to serve them with love. Such compassionate service will bring us inexplicable peace and happiness.

Selfless service is the portal to inner beauty. Imagine a leaf falling freely into a bottomless pit. It falls deeper and deeper until it disappears. Similarly, selfless service gradually obliterates the ego, allowing us to merge into God.

गाँधी युग के साहित्य में यथार्थ का आग्रह और कल्पना का उपयोग दोनों दिखाई पड़ते हैं। यथार्थ-आग्रह प्रधानत: कथा साहित्य में और कल्पना-प्रवणता काव्य के क्षेत्र में दिखाई पड़ती है। यह अवश्य ध्यान रखना चाहिए कि कथा साहित्य में भी कल्पना प्रवणता है और काव्य में भी। प्रेमचंद में यथार्थवाद के साथ आदर्श और स्वच्छंदतावादी रुझान भी है। निराला, प्रसाद, पंत के काव्य में यथार्थवादी रंग भी है। महादेवी की करुणा का संबंध यथार्थ की विषमता से है, जो खुलकर उनके रेखाचित्रों में प्रकट हुई। स्वाधीनता आंदोलन स्वाधीन मानसिकता के बिना असंभव था। 1918 से 1947 तक का युग जिस प्रकार अपने यथार्थ से विक्षुब्ध था, उसी प्रकार एक स्वप्न भी निर्मित कर रहा था। आशा-आकांक्षा के स्वप्नलोक के बिना संघर्ष नहीं हो सकता। इसलिए भारत अपनी पराधीनता के यथार्थ से उबरने और स्वाधीनता के स्वप्न की पूर्ति के लिए संघर्ष कर रहा था। पराधीनता हमारा राष्ट्रीय कलंक था और स्वाधीनता हमारा राष्ट्रीय स्वप्न था। यथार्थ और आदर्श इस एक ऐतिहासिक स्थिति के ही दो पहलू थे। इसलिए इस दौर के साहित्य में ये दोनों साहित्य के प्रेरक हैं। यथार्थ-चित्रण के लिए सबसे समर्थ विद्या उपन्यास की थी। वह प्रेमचंद के उपन्यासों में चरमोत्कर्ष पर पहुँची।

Orwell was writing in 1946, five or seven years before scholarly works by Hannah Arendt, on the one hand, and Karl Friedrich, on the other, provided the definitions of totalitarianism _____ are still in use today. Orwell's own Nineteen Eighty-Four, _____ provides the visceral understanding of totalitarianism _____ we still conjure up today, was a couple of years away. Orwell was in the process of imagining totalitarianism—he had, of course, never lived in a totalitarian society.

Read the passage given below and answer the questions:

It's a common enough scenario. A vegetarian has been invited to a friend's place for dinner. The host forgets that the guest is a vegetarian, and places a [meat] chop in front of her. What is she to do? Probably her initial feelings will be of disgust and repulsion. Vegetarians often develop these sorts of attitudes towards meat-based food, making it easier for them to be absolutists about shunning meat.

Suppose, though, that the vegetarian overcomes her feelings of distaste, and decides to eat the chop, perhaps out of politeness to her host. Has she done something morally reprehensible? Because eating meat typically supports the practice of raising animals in factory farms where they are inhumanely treated and killed, eating meat is likely to contribute to animal suffering (or to the other bad consequences of factory farming)….

However, by not eating meat, and especially by not eating meat when they are offered it in front of non-vegetarians, vegetarians send out a message to other people. By sticking to their ethical commitment, vegetarians signal that there is something wrong with being a carnivore, thus prompting other people to consider the morality of their habit of eating meat and perhaps even persuading them that consuming meat is wrong. In other words, the positive impact of being a vegetarian, in terms of reduction of animal suffering, might be amplified when vegetarianism is publicly defended and demonstrated in social contexts. And, conversely, making exceptions to vegetarianism might convey the message that eating meat is not so bad after all. If even vegetarians sometimes eat meat, then eating meat can't be so reprehensible from a moral perspective, can it? So perhaps the guest who ate the [meat] chop was morally wrong for this reason: she sent out the wrong message to the people who were having dinner with her.

But it isn't as simple as that. Avoiding meat in all circumstances, including in the circumstances in which the vegetarian guest found herself, is a strategy that can backfire. Plausibly, the 'right' message to be sent to non-vegetarians is one that increases the chances that as many of them as possible will give up meat or at least reduce their meat consumption. If people perceive vegetarianism as a position that allows for no exception, they are probably less likely to become vegetarian. A flexible moral position is more appealing than a rigid one that allows for no exceptions. It is more likely that people would be convinced to become flexible vegetarians – that is, that they abstain from eating meat with some exceptions – than to become rigid vegetarians, and being a flexible vegetarian is preferable, from a moral perspective, to being a carnivore.

So the vegetarian guest's eating meat when offered has probably shown the host that it is possible to be a (flexible) vegetarian and, at the same time, occasionally enjoy some meat without feeling guilty. This has certainly made (flexible) vegetarianism look more accessible and more appealing than it would have been if the guest had refused to eat meat.

The author of the passage is likely to agree with all of the following EXCEPT:

Options :

A large number of non-vegetarian people reducing their meat consumption considerably is better than a few non-vegetarians absolutely giving up meat consumption.

The positive impact of absolute vegetarianism, under all circumstances, is less powerful than the impact of vegetarianism that occasionally gives in to non-vegetarianism.

Non-vegetarianism is morally deplorable because most of the meat that is consumed come from animal farms where animals are kept under harsh and cruel condition.

The positive impact of flexible vegetarianism is very little since making exceptions to vegetarianism might convey the message that eating meat is not so bad after all.

Read the passage given below and answer the questions:

…The kind of stewardship championed by David Brower, Paul Ehrlich, E.O. Wilson, Morris and Stewart Udall, Edmund Muskie and Richard Nixon reflected their awe at the grandeur, interconnectedness and unpredictability of the ecosystems and wild landscapes. That perspective was transformative. It ushered in the Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act and the Endangered Species Act, to name just a few successes.

This suite of laws produced real results and is still working, still protecting natural systems and the people who rely on them. After all, we have the hopeful and heroic thinkers who gave us the Clean Air Act to thank for the 2015 Clean Power Plan, the only tool the United States has to enforce national climate change action.

But from climate change denial to corporate malfeasance, resistance to enforceable environmental protection is rampant. Seeking any conceivable path forward, many young leaders are exchanging their sympathy for the victims of environmental damage for the concerns of the regulated community. They turn away from enforceability-based approaches and promote more conservative techniques that they hope will impress and persuade reticent and cynical policymakers and power brokers.

If this is environmentalism at all, it is "desperate environmentalism," characterised not by awe, enthusiasm and enjoyment of nature but by appeasement. It relies on utilitarian efficiencies, cost-benefit analyses, private sector indulgences and anthropocentric divvying of natural resources. It champions voluntary commitments, tweaks to corporate supply chains, protection not of the last great places on Earth but of those places that yield profit or services. From market-friendly cap-and-trade to profit-driven corporate social responsibility, desperate environmentalists angle for the least-bad of the worst options rather than the robust and enforceable safeguards that once defined the movement.

At best, the desperate form of environmentalism is a greyhound chasing a rabbit lure futilely around the track. At worst it is the ratcheting of individually good policies into a sweeping, embedded ideology from which the movement cannot return.

The environmentalists of old insisted on transformation not marginal gains. The Clean Water Act aimed to restore the integrity of all the nation's waters by eliminating water pollution. Now we quantify whether such improvement is economically efficient, and we politely ask whether an industrial facility might consider reducing its discharge. Perhaps, desperate environmentalists suggest, such a reduction would improve the bottom line by reducing some costs. Suddenly, economic efficiency moves from being one in a collection of cultural values that drive decisions to the only relevant value.

And the ratchet turns in only one direction. Having conceded so much to conservative approaches, desperate environmentalists cannot advocate what is now a radical idea of the past: Government should force polluters to reduce pollution for the sake of healthy natural systems and human enjoyment.

The problem is, desperate environmentalists strive for a mythical conservative embrace but cooperation from the right is unrealistic. As they move right in an attempt to meet their opponents, the opponents will not, at some undefined threshold of compromise, consent to new policies of protection. Rather, desperate environmentalists could continue to erode their position until environmentalism grows unrecognizable….

Why does the author say that "desperate environmentalists could continue to erode their position until environmentalism grows unrecognizable"?

Options :

Because environmentalism divorced from economic considerations and profit-driven corporate social responsibilities is not true environmentalism but is a greyhound chasing a rabbit lure futilely around the track.

Because as desperate environmentalists give in increasingly to conservative approaches to accommodate economic efficiency and marginal gains, they are increasingly moving towards a position that might make environmentalism impossible.

Because radical and transformative positions of old environmentalists have become redundant and obsolete in the present scenario.

Because economic efficiency has transformed from being one in a collection of various cultural values that drove decision-making to being the only relevant value.

Why does the author compare desperate environmentalism to "a greyhound chasing a rabbit lure futilely around the track"?

Options :

Because the environment is ratcheting into a sweeping, embedded ideology from which the movement cannot return.

Because the Government should force polluters to reduce pollution for the sake of healthy natural systems and human enjoyment.

Because the economic considerations that desperate environmentalism continues to give in is gradually reducing the efficacy of old and radical environmental policies, and taking them to a point of no return.

Because both greyhounds and rabbits have become endangered species owing to environmental degradation.

What is the primary purpose of the evidence—"The Clean Water Act aimed to restore the integrity of all the nation's waters by eliminating water pollution. Now we quantify whether such improvement is economically efficient, and we politely ask whether an industrial facility might consider reducing its discharge."—in the passage?

Options :

To showcase how desperate environmentalism entails ratcheting of old and good policies into a sweeping, embedded ideology which would eventually consume it.

To showcase the importance of improving the bottom line by reducing some costs, as desperate environmentalists have been doing.

To showcase the increasingly altruistic nature of industrial facilities.

To showcase that no matter what, environmentalists will always force the Government to reduce pollution for the sake of healthy natural systems and human enjoyment.

Read the passage given below and answer the questions:

…Upon more closely examining the place, I surmised that for an indefinite period Bartleby must have ate, dressed, and slept in my office, and that too without plate, mirror, or bed. The cushioned seat of a rickety old sofa in one corner bore the faint impress of a lean, reclining form. Rolled away under his desk, I found a blanket; under the empty grate, a blacking box and brush; on a chair, a tin basin, with soap and a ragged towel; in a newspaper a few crumbs of ginger-nuts and a morsel of cheese. Yes, thought I, it is evident enough that Bartleby has been making his home here, keeping bachelor's hall all by himself. Immediately then the thought came sweeping across me, what miserable friendlessness and loneliness are here revealed! His poverty is great; but his solitude, how horrible!…

For the first time in my life, a feeling of overpowering stinging melancholy seized me. Before, I had never experienced aught but a not-unpleasing sadness. The bond of a common humanity now drew me irresistibly to gloom. A fraternal melancholy! For both I and Bartleby were sons of Adam. I remembered the bright silks and sparkling faces I had seen that day, in gala trim, swan-like sailing down the Mississippi of Broadway; and I contrasted them with the pallid copyist, and thought to myself, Ah, happiness courts the light, so we deem the world is gay; but misery hides aloof, so we deem that misery there is none. These sad fancyings—chimeras, doubtless, of a sick and silly brain—led on to other and more special thoughts, concerning the eccentricities of Bartleby.…

Revolving all these things, and coupling them with the recently discovered fact that he made my office his constant abiding place and home, and not forgetful of his morbid moodiness; revolving all these things, a prudential feeling began to steal over me. My first emotions had been those of pure melancholy and sincerest pity; but just in proportion as the forlornness of Bartleby grew and grew to my imagination, did that same melancholy merge into fear, that pity into repulsion. So true it is, and so terrible too, that up to a certain point the thought or sight of misery enlists our best affections; but, in certain special cases, beyond that point it does not. They err who would assert that invariably this is owing to the inherent selfishness of the human heart. It rather proceeds from a certain hopelessness of remedying excessive and organic ill. To a sensitive being, pity is not seldom pain. And when at last it is perceived that such pity cannot lead to effectual succor, common sense bids the soul rid of it. What I saw that morning persuaded me that the scrivener was the victim of innate and incurable disorder. I might give alms to his body; but his body did not pain him; it was his soul that suffered, and his soul I could not reach. …

Read the passage given below and answer the questions:

After the cruelest of winters, the house still stood. It was pale, washed clean by elements gone wild, and here and there a shutter dangled from a broken hinge. But the structure was sound, the corners had held. I walked around it slowly, studying every detail: the fine edge where window frame met clapboard, the slice of shadow across the roofline, the old wooden railing around the porch. When I climbed the stairs toward the door, I heard the floorboards groan beneath my weight as they had always done. Hello yourself, old friend, I said.

Inside, I made those wounds my own again, drew the curtains back, threw open the window, pulled the covers from the furniture, slapped at the upholstery with my hands. … I made myself at home, kicked off my shoes so I could feel the floor beneath my feet again. I tilted my head, read the titles on the spines of all my books. I played old songs I hadn't heard in months, felt the summer music move through me as if my muscles were the strings. It carried me from room to room while I swept away the mustiness of winter, shook the rugs, cleaned cobwebs out of corners, hung laundered linens on the blind to whip dry in the outdoor air. I pulled closed boxes out of closets and unwrapped all my things, slowly, one by one. I held and turned them in my hands before I put them out again on shelves in cupboards and drawers. And when I had each room all full of me again, I showered and washed away the last of winter's claims in hot lather and steam. …

For me, the end of grief was a homecoming like this one, a returning to myself made sweeter by the long separation. I remember well the months that had followed that most unexpected death, when I felt cut loose, caught in my own cold storm far away from all that made me feel at home. I wondered if I would ever again belong to any time or place. People spoke to me of sadness and loss, as if they were burdens to carry in my hands. I nodded in agreement, afraid to tell them that I felt no burdens, only weightlessness. I thought the world had pulled itself away from me, that I would drift, beyond reach, forever.

But winter ends and grief does pass as I had reclaimed my house and made it my own again, so I slowly reclaimed my life. I resumed my small daily rituals: a cup of coffee with a friend, long walks at sunset. I felt like myself again, and when I laughed it was my own laugh I heard, rich and full. I had feared that, in my absence, the space that I had left behind would close over from disuse, but I returned to find that my house still stood even after the cruelest of winters.

Read the passage given below and answer the questions:

In many countries, television is limited in its spread and its creative abilities, either by the lack of resources or by the constrictions of governmental ownership or both. The cinema, on the other hand, reflects a more vital and spontaneous expression of the secret hopes and fears, ideals and enthusiasms, of a country's people. A small, serious-creative cinema grows alongside the larger, more conventional product and begins to engage the attention of a select national and international audience. … Both wings of Indian cinema—the popular, commercial blockbuster (song-dance-fight-nightclub formula) and the serious-creative minority product (Satyajit Ray, Mrinal Sen, Shyam Benegal et al)—are full of restless vitality.

On the whole, today's big popular cinema is conservative. It reflects, even through its song-dance-fight-chase formula, the fears of a traditional society, a honeycomb of regional-linguistic-religious identities, of being swept away by the winds of change, by scientific progress and large-scale homogenization, shattering the values that have held its complex structure together for many centuries. The modern elements in this cinema are the superficial; they consist of no more than the surface manifestations of industrialization and urbanization. One sees them in the proliferation of mass-produced products and services of recent introduction [in these films]. …

The sharp division between the popular and the serious-creative "New Cinema" came about gradually after the independence of the country in 1947. …The "New Cinema" [is] a wave rising along a wide front all over India, no longer confined to industrially advanced states. It represents a substantial body of new talent devoted to the exploration of the values of a traditional society in the grip of rapid change. From Satyajit Ray to Nirad Mahapatra, it is a highly bi-cultural product, its makers as sensitive to tremors in world cinema as to its own country's agonies. The language of cinema it speaks is familiar to informed film audiences of the West; yet its voice is new and fresh and commands attention. The new cinema is thus the voice of modern India, western in its inflections like the vast wealth of fiction in Indian languages created in the aftermath of British conquest, but deeply concerned with the development of Indian tradition towards viability and relevance in the modern world. This bi-cultural synthesis has assured its acceptance in industrially advance countries. It is authentic and accessible to audiences in Europe and America, in Australia and Japan. Some of the film-makers are trying to break out of the middle class film buff environment and seeking a middle ground where they can claim a share of the vast audience of the commercial cinema even if this somewhat dilutes their purity. Some, like Benegal and Govind Nihalani (Aakrosh and Ardhsatya), have achieved notable success in creating what some critics have described as "Middle Cinema"—another aspect of the cinema's effort, at all levels, from the most commercial to the most purist, to come to terms with the problems, of tradition and change in contemporary India.

Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow.

Sincere service sustains this universe. If humankind serves Nature selflessly, Nature will serve humankind. We expect to have the right amount of rain and sun at the right time, yet we are not interested in protecting our forests and mountains. We long for clean water. At the same time, we pollute our streams and rivers. Only when we coexist with love, trust, respect and an attitude of service, can we achieve success and happiness in life. Whenever we forget this principle, Nature will lash back at us in the form of natural disasters, war, conflict and other forms of disharmony.

Whether it is a family, a community or an organisation, we want all the members to function in harmony. In order for this harmony to arise, the members should construct a 'bridge of love' between each other by serving each other. The foundation of selfless service is selfless love. Love and service are not two; they are eternally united, like a flower and its fragrance. It's not easy to serve others selflessly, but we must put in effort to that end.

True service takes place when we understand the heart of the suffering and serve them. For this, we should be able to understand the minds of those in pain and to go down to their level and help.

We have all experienced pain and sadness. Therefore, when we see someone else in pain, we should have the heart to openly share their pain. Then, we will be able to serve them with love. Such compassionate service will bring us inexplicable peace and happiness.

Selfless service is the portal to inner beauty. Imagine a leaf falling freely into a bottomless pit. It falls deeper and deeper until it disappears. Similarly, selfless service gradually obliterates the ego, allowing us to merge into God.

नीचे दिये गए गद्यांश को पढ़कर पूछे गये प्रश्नों के उत्तर दीजिए।

गाँधी युग के साहित्य में यथार्थ का आग्रह और कल्पना का उपयोग दोनों दिखाई पड़ते हैं। यथार्थ-आग्रह प्रधानत: कथा साहित्य में और कल्पना-प्रवणता काव्य के क्षेत्र में दिखाई पड़ती है। यह अवश्य ध्यान रखना चाहिए कि कथा साहित्य में भी कल्पना प्रवणता है और काव्य में भी। प्रेमचंद में यथार्थवाद के साथ आदर्श और स्वच्छंदतावादी रुझान भी है। निराला, प्रसाद, पंत के काव्य में यथार्थवादी रंग भी है। महादेवी की करुणा का संबंध यथार्थ की विषमता से है, जो खुलकर उनके रेखाचित्रों में प्रकट हुई। स्वाधीनता आंदोलन स्वाधीन मानसिकता के बिना असंभव था। 1918 से 1947 तक का युग जिस प्रकार अपने यथार्थ से विक्षुब्ध था, उसी प्रकार एक स्वप्न भी निर्मित कर रहा था। आशा-आकांक्षा के स्वप्नलोक के बिना संघर्ष नहीं हो सकता। इसलिए भारत अपनी पराधीनता के यथार्थ से उबरने और स्वाधीनता के स्वप्न की पूर्ति के लिए संघर्ष कर रहा था। पराधीनता हमारा राष्ट्रीय कलंक था और स्वाधीनता हमारा राष्ट्रीय स्वप्न था। यथार्थ और आदर्श इस एक ऐतिहासिक स्थिति के ही दो पहलू थे। इसलिए इस दौर के साहित्य में ये दोनों साहित्य के प्रेरक हैं। यथार्थ-चित्रण के लिए सबसे समर्थ विद्या उपन्यास की थी। वह प्रेमचंद के उपन्यासों में चरमोत्कर्ष पर पहुँची।

Read the passage given below and answer the questions:

It's a common enough scenario. A vegetarian has been invited to a friend's place for dinner. The host forgets that the guest is a vegetarian, and places a [meat] chop in front of her. What is she to do? Probably her initial feelings will be of disgust and repulsion. Vegetarians often develop these sorts of attitudes towards meat-based food, making it easier for them to be absolutists about shunning meat.

Suppose, though, that the vegetarian overcomes her feelings of distaste, and decides to eat the chop, perhaps out of politeness to her host. Has she done something morally reprehensible? Because eating meat typically supports the practice of raising animals in factory farms where they are inhumanely treated and killed, eating meat is likely to contribute to animal suffering (or to the other bad consequences of factory farming)….

However, by not eating meat, and especially by not eating meat when they are offered it in front of non-vegetarians, vegetarians send out a message to other people. By sticking to their ethical commitment, vegetarians signal that there is something wrong with being a carnivore, thus prompting other people to consider the morality of their habit of eating meat and perhaps even persuading them that consuming meat is wrong. In other words, the positive impact of being a vegetarian, in terms of reduction of animal suffering, might be amplified when vegetarianism is publicly defended and demonstrated in social contexts. And, conversely, making exceptions to vegetarianism might convey the message that eating meat is not so bad after all. If even vegetarians sometimes eat meat, then eating meat can't be so reprehensible from a moral perspective, can it? So perhaps the guest who ate the [meat] chop was morally wrong for this reason: she sent out the wrong message to the people who were having dinner with her.

But it isn't as simple as that. Avoiding meat in all circumstances, including in the circumstances in which the vegetarian guest found herself, is a strategy that can backfire. Plausibly, the 'right' message to be sent to non-vegetarians is one that increases the chances that as many of them as possible will give up meat or at least reduce their meat consumption. If people perceive vegetarianism as a position that allows for no exception, they are probably less likely to become vegetarian. A flexible moral position is more appealing than a rigid one that allows for no exceptions. It is more likely that people would be convinced to become flexible vegetarians – that is, that they abstain from eating meat with some exceptions – than to become rigid vegetarians, and being a flexible vegetarian is preferable, from a moral perspective, to being a carnivore.

So the vegetarian guest's eating meat when offered has probably shown the host that it is possible to be a (flexible) vegetarian and, at the same time, occasionally enjoy some meat without feeling guilty. This has certainly made (flexible) vegetarianism look more accessible and more appealing than it would have been if the guest had refused to eat meat.

At the beginning of paragraph 4, why does the author say that for a vegetarian to avoid meat consumption in all circumstances is a strategy that can backfire?

Options :

✓ Because non-vegetarians are more likely to be convinced to become flexible vegetarians than become absolute vegetarians.

✗ Because non-vegetarians are more likely to be convinced to become absolute vegetarians than become flexible vegetarians.

✗ Because people's notion of morality is relative and unpredictable.

✗ Because the positive impact of being a vegetarian, in terms of reduction of animal suffering, might be amplified when vegetarianism is publicly defended and demonstrated in social contexts.

The author of the passage is likely to agree with all of the following EXCEPT:

Options :

A large number of non-vegetarian people reducing their meat consumption considerably is better than a few non-vegetarians absolutely giving up meat consumption.

The positive impact of absolute vegetarianism, under all circumstances, is less powerful than the impact of vegetarianism that occasionally gives in to non-vegetarianism.

Non-vegetarianism is morally deplorable because most of the meat that is consumed come from animal farms where animals are kept under harsh and cruel condition.

The positive impact of flexible vegetarianism is very little since making exceptions to vegetarianism might convey the message that eating meat is not so bad after all.

Read the passage given below and answer the questions:

…The kind of stewardship championed by David Brower, Paul Ehrlich, E.O. Wilson, Morris and Stewart Udall, Edmund Muskie and Richard Nixon reflected their awe at the grandeur, interconnectedness and unpredictability of the ecosystems and wild landscapes. That perspective was transformative. It ushered in the Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act and the Endangered Species Act, to name just a few successes.

This suite of laws produced real results and is still working, still protecting natural systems and the people who rely on them. After all, we have the hopeful and heroic thinkers who gave us the Clean Air Act to thank for the 2015 Clean Power Plan, the only tool the United States has to enforce national climate change action.

But from climate change denial to corporate malfeasance, resistance to enforceable environmental protection is rampant. Seeking any conceivable path forward, many young leaders are exchanging their sympathy for the victims of environmental damage for the concerns of the regulated community. They turn away from enforceability-based approaches and promote more conservative techniques that they hope will impress and persuade reticent and cynical policymakers and power brokers.

If this is environmentalism at all, it is "desperate environmentalism," characterised not by awe, enthusiasm and enjoyment of nature but by appeasement. It relies on utilitarian efficiencies, cost-benefit analyses, private sector indulgences and anthropocentric divvying of natural resources. It champions voluntary commitments, tweaks to corporate supply chains, protection not of the last great places on Earth but of those places that yield profit or services. From market-friendly cap-and-trade to profit-driven corporate social responsibility, desperate environmentalists angle for the least-bad of the worst options rather than the robust and enforceable safeguards that once defined the movement.

At best, the desperate form of environmentalism is a greyhound chasing a rabbit lure futilely around the track. At worst it is the ratcheting of individually good policies into a sweeping, embedded ideology from which the movement cannot return.

The environmentalists of old insisted on transformation not marginal gains. The Clean Water Act aimed to restore the integrity of all the nation's waters by eliminating water pollution. Now we quantify whether such improvement is economically efficient, and we politely ask whether an industrial facility might consider reducing its discharge. Perhaps, desperate environmentalists suggest, such a reduction would improve the bottom line by reducing some costs. Suddenly, economic efficiency moves from being one in a collection of cultural values that drive decisions to the only relevant value.

And the ratchet turns in only one direction. Having conceded so much to conservative approaches, desperate environmentalists cannot advocate what is now a radical idea of the past: Government should force polluters to reduce pollution for the sake of healthy natural systems and human enjoyment.

The problem is, desperate environmentalists strive for a mythical conservative embrace but cooperation from the right is unrealistic. As they move right in an attempt to meet their opponents, the opponents will not, at some undefined threshold of compromise, consent to new policies of protection. Rather, desperate environmentalists could continue to erode their position until environmentalism grows unrecognizable….

Why does the author say that "desperate environmentalists could continue to erode their position until environmentalism grows unrecognizable"?

Options :

Because environmentalism divorced from economic considerations and profit-driven corporate social responsibilities is not true environmentalism but is a greyhound chasing a rabbit lure futilely around the track.

Because as desperate environmentalists give in increasingly to conservative approaches to accommodate economic efficiency and marginal gains, they are increasingly moving towards a position that might make environmentalism impossible.

Because radical and transformative positions of old environmentalists have become redundant and obsolete in the present scenario.

Because economic efficiency has transformed from being one in a collection of various cultural values that drove decision-making to being the only relevant value.

Read the passage given below and answer the questions:

…Upon more closely examining the place, I surmised that for an indefinite period Bartleby must have ate, dressed, and slept in my office, and that too without plate, mirror, or bed. The cushioned seat of a rickety old sofa in one corner bore the faint impress of a lean, reclining form. Rolled away under his desk, I found a blanket; under the empty grate, a blacking box and brush; on a chair, a tin basin, with soap and a ragged towel; in a newspaper a few crumbs of ginger-nuts and a morsel of cheese. Yes, thought I, it is evident enough that Bartleby has been making his home here, keeping bachelor's hall all by himself. Immediately then the thought came sweeping across me, what miserable friendlessness and loneliness are here revealed! His poverty is great; but his solitude, how horrible!…

For the first time in my life, a feeling of overpowering stinging melancholy seized me. Before, I had never experienced aught but a not-unpleasing sadness. The bond of a common humanity now drew me irresistibly to gloom. A fraternal melancholy! For both I and Bartleby were sons of Adam. I remembered the bright silks and sparkling faces I had seen that day, in gala trim, swan-like sailing down the Mississippi of Broadway; and I contrasted them with the pallid copyist, and thought to myself, Ah, happiness courts the light, so we deem the world is gay; but misery hides aloof, so we deem that misery there is none. These sad fancyings—chimeras, doubtless, of a sick and silly brain—led on to other and more special thoughts, concerning the eccentricities of Bartleby.…

Revolving all these things, and coupling them with the recently discovered fact that he made my office his constant abiding place and home, and not forgetful of his morbid moodiness; revolving all these things, a prudential feeling began to steal over me. My first emotions had been those of pure melancholy and sincerest pity; but just in proportion as the forlornness of Bartleby grew and grew to my imagination, did that same melancholy merge into fear, that pity into repulsion. So true it is, and so terrible too, that up to a certain point the thought or sight of misery enlists our best affections; but, in certain special cases, beyond that point it does not. They err who would assert that invariably this is owing to the inherent selfishness of the human heart. It rather proceeds from a certain hopelessness of remedying excessive and organic ill. To a sensitive being, pity is not seldom pain. And when at last it is perceived that such pity cannot lead to effectual succor, common sense bids the soul rid of it. What I saw that morning persuaded me that the scrivener was the victim of innate and incurable disorder. I might give alms to his body; but his body did not pain him; it was his soul that suffered, and his soul I could not reach. …

Read the passage given below and answer the questions:

After the cruelest of winters, the house still stood. It was pale, washed clean by elements gone wild, and here and there a shutter dangled from a broken hinge. But the structure was sound, the corners had held. I walked around it slowly, studying every detail: the fine edge where window frame met clapboard, the slice of shadow across the roofline, the old wooden railing around the porch. When I climbed the stairs toward the door, I heard the floorboards groan beneath my weight as they had always done. Hello yourself, old friend, I said.

Inside, I made those wounds my own again, drew the curtains back, threw open the window, pulled the covers from the furniture, slapped at the upholstery with my hands. … I made myself at home, kicked off my shoes so I could feel the floor beneath my feet again. I tilted my head, read the titles on the spines of all my books. I played old songs I hadn't heard in months, felt the summer music move through me as if my muscles were the strings. It carried me from room to room while I swept away the mustiness of winter, shook the rugs, cleaned cobwebs out of corners, hung laundered linens on the blind to whip dry in the outdoor air. I pulled closed boxes out of closets and unwrapped all my things, slowly, one by one. I held and turned them in my hands before I put them out again on shelves in cupboards and drawers. And when I had each room all full of me again, I showered and washed away the last of winter's claims in hot lather and steam. …

For me, the end of grief was a homecoming like this one, a returning to myself made sweeter by the long separation. I remember well the months that had followed that most unexpected death, when I felt cut loose, caught in my own cold storm far away from all that made me feel at home. I wondered if I would ever again belong to any time or place. People spoke to me of sadness and loss, as if they were burdens to carry in my hands. I nodded in agreement, afraid to tell them that I felt no burdens, only weightlessness. I thought the world had pulled itself away from me, that I would drift, beyond reach, forever.

But winter ends and grief does pass as I had reclaimed my house and made it my own again, so I slowly reclaimed my life. I resumed my small daily rituals: a cup of coffee with a friend, long walks at sunset. I felt like myself again, and when I laughed it was my own laugh I heard, rich and full. I had feared that, in my absence, the space that I had left behind would close over from disuse, but I returned to find that my house still stood even after the cruelest of winters.

Read the passage given below and answer the questions:

In many countries, television is limited in its spread and its creative abilities, either by the lack of resources or by the constrictions of governmental ownership or both. The cinema, on the other hand, reflects a more vital and spontaneous expression of the secret hopes and fears, ideals and enthusiasms, of a country's people. A small, serious-creative cinema grows alongside the larger, more conventional product and begins to engage the attention of a select national and international audience. … Both wings of Indian cinema—the popular, commercial blockbuster (song-dance-fight-nightclub formula) and the serious-creative minority product (Satyajit Ray, Mrinal Sen, Shyam Benegal et al)—are full of restless vitality.

On the whole, today's big popular cinema is conservative. It reflects, even through its song-dance-fight-chase formula, the fears of a traditional society, a honeycomb of regional-linguistic-religious identities, of being swept away by the winds of change, by scientific progress and large-scale homogenization, shattering the values that have held its complex structure together for many centuries. The modern elements in this cinema are the superficial; they consist of no more than the surface manifestations of industrialization and urbanization. One sees them in the proliferation of mass-produced products and services of recent introduction [in these films]. …

The sharp division between the popular and the serious-creative "New Cinema" came about gradually after the independence of the country in 1947. …The "New Cinema" [is] a wave rising along a wide front all over India, no longer confined to industrially advanced states. It represents a substantial body of new talent devoted to the exploration of the values of a traditional society in the grip of rapid change. From Satyajit Ray to Nirad Mahapatra, it is a highly bi-cultural product, its makers as sensitive to tremors in world cinema as to its own country's agonies. The language of cinema it speaks is familiar to informed film audiences of the West; yet its voice is new and fresh and commands attention. The new cinema is thus the voice of modern India, western in its inflections like the vast wealth of fiction in Indian languages created in the aftermath of British conquest, but deeply concerned with the development of Indian tradition towards viability and relevance in the modern world. This bi-cultural synthesis has assured its acceptance in industrially advance countries. It is authentic and accessible to audiences in Europe and America, in Australia and Japan. Some of the film-makers are trying to break out of the middle class film buff environment and seeking a middle ground where they can claim a share of the vast audience of the commercial cinema even if this somewhat dilutes their purity. Some, like Benegal and Govind Nihalani (Aakrosh and Ardhsatya), have achieved notable success in creating what some critics have described as "Middle Cinema"—another aspect of the cinema's effort, at all levels, from the most commercial to the most purist, to come to terms with the problems, of tradition and change in contemporary India.
